Gameplay

The Descent is a Survival Horror game where you journey through different cave systems while fighting zombies and other creatures.

While journeying through these caves, you will have to crawl through different tunnels, climb up and down different cliffs, and take off your backpack to squeeze through tight fits.

Descent is a slow paced game. Enemies that are fast are also easy to kill and sometimes do less damage but slow down the player. Slower enemies can have medium to high health, taking longer to kill, but doing more damage in the process. Faster enemies are made to slow the player down from quick getaways, while slower enemies can contest areas, making it harder to get through.

The map will be designed to have each area separated by load doors. Each area will have a cave system that surrounds a main portion of the map. The few maps that I have in mind are designated as such: The village, The arena and the city. For a full game, I think that there should be at least 4 or 5 main map areas that the player should travel to. Of course, more would be better, but I just want this to be a small game.

Use Red Telephones to save. As the game continues further and further, the phone will stop being connected to the mount and at some point, the phone will stop being connected to the wall entirely.

The player can use rope to ascend or descend from a cliff. For the most part, you will attach rope at the top of a cliff, because that’s the only time you would physically be able to in real life. Going up and down from a cliff side will work exactly like a ladder, except if you try to jump off, you will jump away from the cliff and rapidly descend. The player's stamina meter will deplete as you climb up and slowly deplete if you climb down instead. While you remain at the same point, your character will start to regain stamina. While at a rested spot or climbing down, you can fire any weapon that is not a two handed weapon. While climbing down, your weapon will be inaccurate and moving around, and you will not be able to aim down sights. If you are rested, you will be more accurate and can aim downsights, but your weapon will still sway slightly making you more inaccurate than if you were just standing.
